Mrs. Shannon Adams had no idea what lay in store for her as she exited the bus at The Marine Corps recruit center at Parris Island, South Carolina last week. She was treated to a brief look into the life of a new recruit at the massive facility. The food, the atmosphere, the briefings, and every other aspect of recruit life was brought into a sharper focus for this veteran counselor.

Mrs. Adams was introduced to mess hall food, early morning exercise (physical training), and a healthy dose of weapons and equipment instruction. She participated in live fire ranges where she found out that, among other things, she is "left-eye-dominant" and should fire a rifle left-handed. Mrs. Adams was also able to get "Up-Close and Personal" with some other equipment. She got to spend time with pilots and crews from VMFA (AW)-533. They fly some of the most sophisticated fighter aircraft in the world. Other briefings included presentations by medical, communication, and other branches of the Marines Corps.

Many of the briefings she participated in will allow her to describe the recruiting process and training atmosphere to prospective recruits among our U-City population. She was able to bring home useful information that can help our students make more informed decisions regarding future military service in the United States Marine Corps.
